Lucie B. Amundsen is a writer, humorist and reluctant farmer. Opening the first commercial-scale, pasture-raised egg company in the Upper Midwest, gave her fodder for an award-winning book. As one reviewer put it, "if Tina Fey and Michael Pollan were to buy a farm, it would be Locally Laid with its unusual pairing of humor and academic research."

Lucie is an audience favorite whose witty and engaging style shines when she's in front of a crowd. She lives with her husband and two children in Duluth.

As a 'remedial adult' with chickens, I heartily commend you to the words, wisdom, and knowledge of Lucie B. Amundsen, an author whose voice is as earthy as a chicken run, as goofy and bright as a pasture-raised egg yolk at sunrise, and as down-to-earth as barn boots in mud. When people ask me about chickens, I say, 'Read Lucie.'
