Gift shop owners, Roy and Lola Ambrose suddenly disappear in the Canary Islands and are declared dead. Left with the task of finding the will and settling the estate; their four daughters are lead to unexpected discoveries including gold coins, Swiss banks, and a tangled thread between a drug cartel and the US Government. In their search, they discover that the answers to many of life's questions aren't always simple.

Dr. Ingalls is a Webster High School graduate who served three years in the US army before completing his education at the University of Wisconsin Medical School. He returned to Webster to practice medicine where he remains today. Dr. Ingalls and his wife, Tammy, have four daughters and six grandchildren. His earlier works include a two-volume compilation of his InterCounty Leader column, "Cold Turkey." He is currently working on "There's A Way," the sequel to "If There's A Will."
